A proud veteran of the United States Marine Corps, George spent his entire adult life serving others. He was a dedicated volunteer firefighter, offering his time, skills, and courage to protect his community. George's commitment to service extended to his family as well, where he was a devoted father to his children, Jenna Marie Vetterly and Michael Thomas Vetterly; and a proud grandfather to his two grandsons, Mason Daniel Bosi and Jayce Daniel Vetterly. His love for his family was unwavering, and he cherished every moment spent with them.

George was one of seven siblings, and was deeply loved by his family, including his father, John Raymond Vetterly Sr., who survives him; and his brothers and sisters. Despite the challenges life presented, George maintained close and meaningful relationships with those who mattered most to him.

While not married, George maintained a special relationship with his ex-wife, Tracy D'Amico, with whom he remained close and continued to share a bond built on mutual respect and care.
